BEING DYNAMIC AND COMMITTED paid off in a big way for a young man at the Lloyd Erskine Sandiford Centre on Wednesday when he was named the CEO's Awardee at the tenth annual BHL Group of Companies CEO's Award Of Excellence event.

Before an audience of close to 600 ecstatic employees, BHL chief executive officer (CEO) Richard Cozier announced that the Pine Hill Dairy's (PHD) 32-year-old health, safety, environmental & energy Officer Damien Catlyn had emerged as winner, from a field of four other Employees Of The Year representing each BHL company.

Catlyn won the coveted title of Most Outstanding Employee within the conglomerate Cozier explained, because in a relatively short time he'd managed to lead a shift in culture and approach for staff who had grown accustomed to performing tasks in one way, by collaboratively demonstrating that there is a better and safer method of getting the job done.

Also important to the BHL CEO was the fact that environmental matters were being addressed and systematically improved.

In an interview following the ceremony, the new CEO's Awardee attributed his success to taking a "bottom up" approach to health and safety on the job. "I don't just tell people to do this or that. But rather, let us make this change together.

"I also believe in making health and safety personal to everyone I work with, no matter what position they hold in the company, so we have management being trained too and in the same setting as employees – there is no difference."

The top awardee described health and safety as a "burgeoning field" especially with the recent enactment
